

Helina Jolly

I am a PhD student at the Resources, Environment, and Sustainability, University of British Columbia, Canada. My research interests include ecosystem services, Indigenous rights, gender studies, biodiversity conservation and environmental policies. My doctoral work will focus on the predicament of Kattunaikar people of Wayanad forests in Kerala (South India) and evaluate the ecosystem services, Adivasi security, and rights (eroded or enhanced) as a function of forest policies.

I also run a parallel project 'The Everyday Nature' which aims to understand the perceptions of people towards nature. Before joining RES, I worked in India for nearly six years on various environment and development sector projects in association with Ministry of Environment Forest and Climate Change, Government of India, Deutsche Gesellschaft für Internationale Zusammenarbeit GmbH (GIZ), Centre for Science and Environment, Clinton Climate Initiative and Ennovent.

I am a Commonwealth Scholar and a graduate from London School of Economics and Political Science. A strong advocate of women empowerment, huge foodie and loves to paint in her spare time. Contact: helinajolly.ubc@gmail.com | helinajolly@alumni.ubc.ca | LinkedIn
